

ABSTRACT

Communications Network

5 In a communications network, communications terminals exchange call control capability data which mutually identifies selected call control protocols and network address types. The terminals subsequently set up a call using protocols chosen from those identified. Preferably the terminals continuously monitor for a request for the exchange of such data, allowing other parties to join a session subsequently, after the initial set up.

10

Figure 1

[illegible]